WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

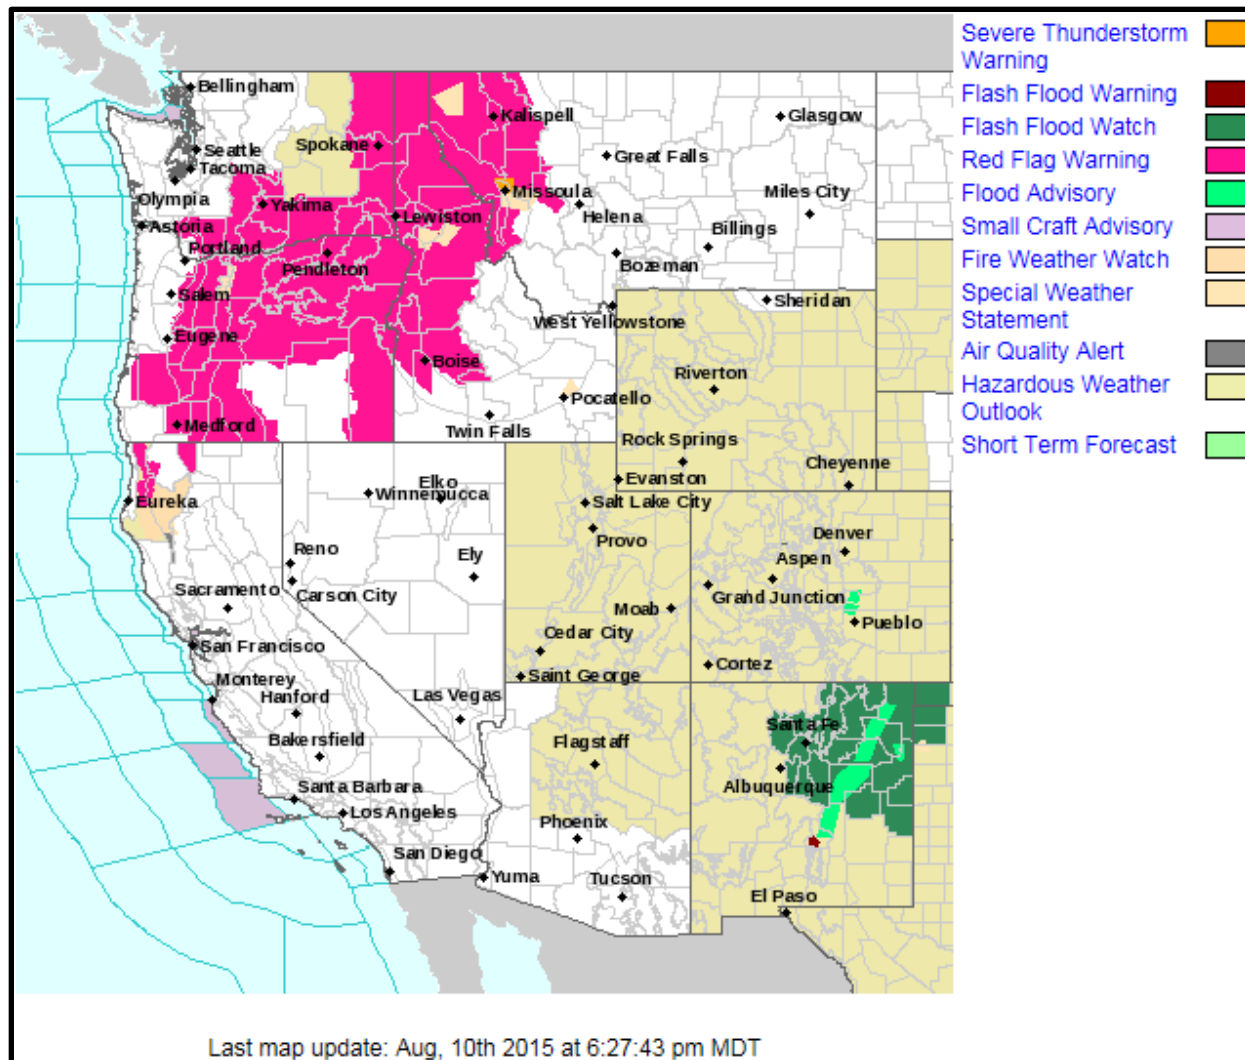

Low pressure is deepening offshore. Winds will increase out of the south to southwest today, gusting to 27-35 mph over higher terrain and exposed areas. There will be a bit more southeast wind component on Tuesday as gusts reach 30-40 mph, similar winds from the south on Wednesday, and slightly stronger gusts out of the south to west on Thursday as the low moves northeast toward the Washington coast. There is a chance of showers or thunderstorms in far Northwestern California each day through Thursday, with a remote chance farther east over the mountains near the Oregon and Nevada state lines. The remainder of the Northern Operations region will be mild, dry, and breezy. As the low moves out of the area early Friday high pressure will push in from the south. Winds will diminish and a warming and drying trend will take place through Sunday. A downslope surface north-northeast offshore wind pattern will enhance the warm and dry conditions from the lower Western Sierra slopes to the coast Friday night through Sunday. Poor overnight relative humidity recovery will be common this weekend. A Pacific low pressure trough will set up near the coast again by late Monday and bring cooler temperatures and higher humidity and increasing southwest winds through midweek.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Low pressure currently off the Pacific Northwest Coast will drop southward to off the Northern California Coast maintaining a little below normal temperatures across the region through Tuesday. Maximum temperatures across the mountains will be in the 70s to low 80s, while valley locations get into the mid 80s to mid 90s. A significant warming trend will occur Wednesday through this weekend as strong high pressure over Texas moves westward and eventually becomes centered over Arizona. Widespread temperatures over 100 degrees will affect the inland valleys and foothills starting Friday. Minimum relative humidity will be mainly between 12% and 25% above and inland from the marine layer through this weekend. The marine layer will be between 2,000 and 3,000 feet deep through Tuesday and then shrink significantly Wednesday through this weekend. A brief monsoonal surge from the south will bring isolated afternoon showers and thunderstorms to the mountains and deserts of Southern California east of the I-15 corridor Wednesday and Thursday.
